

MORNING APPEAL.

Saturday, February 5 1887.

ARTESIAN WELL BOUNTY.

Powell's bill to appropriate $10,000 to be paid in bounties for artesian well boring is an excellent measure, worth as much, in fact, to the State as any other measure now before the Legislature. It has some features, however, regarding which the APPEAL will make some suggestions.

Giving a bounty of $1.25 a foot from the surface boring down will result in numbers of men sinking wells of 15 to 20 feet deep and compelling the State to pay a bounty for something which does it no good so far as a prospective return of taxable property is concerned. There are ranches in this State where wells twenty feet deep can be made to flow small quantities of water. Let the bill be so amended that the wells must flow no less than 5,000 gallons per day and be at least 75 feet deep. McConnell argues that a well which does not flow ought to receive the bounty also on the ground that a man who has spent his money and got water is in a better position to stand the loss than one who has spent quite a sum and failed. This is a good argument but as a dry well is not an addition to the State's resources, the bounty should only be paid when a prescribed depth is reached, say 300 or 400 feet. A man who bores to that depth is not doing it for the bounty but to get water. There should also be a clause that wells started since Jan. 1, 1887, should come under the provisions of the Act. The Act will prove of great benefit to the State and prove a stepping stone to future prosperity.

NEVADA'S RESOURCES.

Within the last six months Nevada's resources have been prominently brought to the front, and already the signs of approaching prosperity can be seen on every hand. This is notably so in mining. For three years past, owing to the unwarrantable warfare of the gold-bugs of the East, our mining industries have languished, hundreds of men were thrown out of employment and compelled to seek work elsewhere, and the result was to stagnate every branch of business throughout the State. Now the reaction has set in, silver is gradually regaining its old time prestige, and a feeling of confidence has been instilled in the minds of our people such as they have not enjoyed for years. Many sales of mining properties have taken place of late, especially in White Pine and Elko counties, and mines which have been abandoned for years are being reopened and soon will be adding their quota of the precious metal. This, together with our other industries, and the prospect of low freight rates, made possible by the passage of the Inter State Commerce bill, has caused our business men to look forward to an era of prosperity such as the Battle-born State has not experienced since the memorable bonanza days.—Stockman.

—During the past few years it has been demonstrated that in Nevada alfalfa will yield three crops a year and that each crop is fifty per cent. heavier than a crop of wild hay, thus causing the land to yield its owner four and one-half times the feed that is produced from the same acreage that is sown in native grasses. It is no longer an experiment, as it has been found to grow well on a variety of lands and will fatten cattle, sheep and horses as well as wild hay with grain. By combining this branch of agriculture with range stockgrowing, stockmen can look at the future confident that success is assured.—Stockman.

—Charlie Goodwin in the Salt Lake Tribune thinks that when the Chicago parson preached to the ballet dancers he should have preached from the text, "Whatever thy hand findeth to do it with thy might." Anybody ought to know better than this. The ballet dancers dance with their feet, not with their hands. The text ought to come from the scene where the daughter of Herodias danced for the head of John the Baptist.
